INVESTMENT STRATEGY

A strategy for investing in fixed-income instruments that aims to achieve returns above those typically associated with fixed-income investment products. This is achieved by selecting debt securities or equivalent investment objects, usually collective investment undertakings. Most of the assets are invested in the Nordic region (Denmark, Norway, Finland, Sweden) corporate bonds that have a credit rating below investment grade. Proportion of alternative investments can represent up to 30% of the assets. Derivatives can be used to hedge against currency exchange rate change risk.

COMMENT

Although at a slower pace, both the European Central Bank (ECB) and the US Federal Reserve (Fed) continued to raise interest rates by 0.5% and 0.25% respectively at each meeting. Central bankers continued to communicate that the fight against inflation is not yet over (although headline inflation is retreating, net inflation is still at a relatively high level). Moreover, as economic data continued to surprise positively and to signal the heating up of the economy, there were increasing signs that rapid interest rate cuts were not to be expected.

However, it was the turmoil in the banking sector that confused the cards the most. Bond prices rallied and yields fell to near-record lows – in March, the yield on the 2-year US Treasury bond fell by as much as 80 basis points in a 2-day period, the biggest drop since the market turmoil of October 1987. Investment grade and low credit risk bonds earned positive returns as fears of contagion from financial system stress led investors to allocate capital to the safest financial instruments. In addition, as the big banks were still paying low interest rates on deposits compared to short-term bonds, savers started to withdraw their capital massively and invest it in money market funds. At the beginning of this year, as investors' risk appetite recovered, a shortage of supply emerged, with companies and sovereigns actively issuing bonds on favourable terms. In January alone, for example, Romania met a third of its annual financing needs, giving it more room to maneuver in future borrowing.
